● ELIZABETH REID, VP, HEAD OF GOOGLE SEARCH

'With AI overviews, people asking more'

Google Search is being reimagined for the AI era. As the curiosity engine of the world changes its role to take on changing user needs and challenges of new incumbents, Nandagopal Rajan spoke to Elizabeth Reid, VP, Head of Google Search, on the sidelines of Google I/O about the changing search landscape, AI overviews and its impact on online business, as the new AI Mode being launched this week. Excerpts:

What are the behavioural changes you are seeing in users in times of AI overviews?

We are seeing a couple of different behaviour changes. First, people are searching more. People think of questions, but they don't always ask them. It's going to be too hard. It's going to work? And it's sort of like a split second calculation. With AI overviews, because it is answering new types of questions, people learn over time and start asking more of the questions because they have confidence they can get the response. The second thing is, we particularly see this with sort of these longer, harder questions; people will often ask questions around how to do something. We are seeing more searching overall.

We get the sense that a lot of people don't want to do a deep dive, they just want to see the overview, because that's the gist of what they were looking for. Is that a realisation you have also had?

When people come in with a question, we want to make sure we give them a great response. And often they come in with the idea that they only have one question, and then, based on the response, they get intrigued to learn more. So they might dive in deeper on a web page, or they might decide they are going to ask another question accordingly. We see that the clicks to web pages when AI overviews exist are of higher quality. People spend more time on these pages and engage more. They are exploring with higher satisfaction with the responses when we show the AI overviews. But the ultimate test is, are you willing to pick up your phone an extra time today to ask a question? And so that's really good to see.

As you are reimagining search, are you seeing a positive or negative change in the business models, because a lot of online is dependent on search.

AI overviews are designed to be part of the main search experience, and our proven business model there has really continued to work. At this point, AI overviews is used by over 1.5 billion users each month, and our queries continue to grow and our revenue continues to grow. And as we look to AI Mode, we have confidence that that business model can continue. I think the ads will get more relevant and the websites we be more hyper relevant. People will ask more specific questions. But then there's still a lot of choice, and then there are a lot of choices, there continues to be an opportunity for ads, and we're looking forward to starting to test that in AI mode. But first we want to get the product right.

AI overviews for a specific query, is that getting better each time, or is it almost always the same?

We have made a lot of advancements since we rolled it out a year ago. It can get better with an upgrade in the model — we are talking about rolling out Gemini 2.5 more; but within it, we continue to fine-tune it. We have raters who help us understand how to improve the factuality, how to improve the helpfulness.

Bringing in new features like when are images relevant add to the usefulness of the response. Speed is really paramount. We talked today about how AI overviews are the fastest AI responses, because in search, people expect a very quick response. We know if we take too long, people get annoyed, and they don't search as much. So speed has been something we have also been laser focused on, and has been getting better over time.

IE: Is DeepSearch a response to how users are maybe moving to AI platforms for a lot of their queries? Have you been a bit late to this game?

Reid: DeepSearch is really a recognition that there's this trade off on how thorough you want the response to be based on your needs. So AI mode, in general, will take a question, it will break it up into different topics, it will issue a bunch of search queries and that's great for a lot of use cases. If, however, you are doing something that you really would have spent like hours of research on, you are willing to wait more than a few seconds, so you can get sort of a more in-depth response. So we have seen a lot of positive feedback, in general, with Deep Research in Gemini, and that ability to go deeper and really give a thoughtful response. So we are bringing those capabilities into AI mode.

IE: Is AI mode going to be the home for all AI in search, or would you have overviews with your regular search as it is now?

Reid: We expect most people will still continue to interact with AI through AI overviews. AI overviews isn't going away. Search is still going to be the place to come for most of your queries. AI mode is for when you have a harder question, or you want to ask lots of follow up questions, you feel like your question really needs the cutting edge model.

IE: Is SEO dead?

Reid: People have many different interpretations of SEO. Are you producing really high-quality content for people? Do you create great websites that people will love reading? That is the best SEO, right? Because ultimately if you want people to come to your site, you should produce content that people want to read.

Sonata Software launches AI agent

PADMINI DHURVARAJ
Bengaluru, May 21

SONATA SOFTWARE has launched AgentBridge, a platform designed to accelerate AI-powered enterprise transformation. The new platform enables organisations to centrally design, deploy and govern intelligent AI agents across business functions.

The company said that enterprises today face challenges with fragmented AI initiatives, siloed tools, and disconnected systems, all of which contribute to inefficiencies and limited return on investment.

AgentBridge aims to solve these issues through a unified multi-agent orchestration platform. This allows for the creation, deployment, and lifecycle management of AI-powered workflows from a centralised, enterprise-grade marketplace. AgentBridge incorporates built-in role-based access controls, large language model (LLM) guardrails, and audit-ready logging to ensure robust security, compliance, and governance. The platform's modular, no-code interface is designed to empower both business and IT teams to build and scale AI agents with speed.

AgentBridge also supports integrations with leading cloud providers, enterprise resource planning systems, and enterprise databases.

Rajeshwar Datta Roy, chief technology officer of Sonata Software, said, "AgentBridge directly addresses the industry's growing need for scalable, secure, and compliant AI deployment. It empowers enterprises to drive adoption with governance and observability, enabling real efficiencies, new revenue streams, and next-level automation." Sharmita Sherikar, head of corporate development at Sonata Software, added, "AI agents are fast becoming strategic assets in the enterprise. AgentBridge is a game-changer—driving automation in customer experience, supply chain, compliance, and more. It represents Sonata's commitment to shaping the future of enterprise AI through strategic collaboration and modernisation."

India Inc's fixed assets up 7.6% in FY25, passenger cars rise highest

INDIA INC'S FIXED ASSETS grew 7.6% in FY25, with the passenger cars segment witnessing the highest rate of 20.4%, according to a Bank of Baroda report.
